2023
ANNUAL REPORT

'23 ACCOMPLISHMENTS

Protected Public Lands & Waters

Created landmark protections for fish-bearing streams in the Tillamook & Clatsop State Forests.

Restored cold water habitat

Placed large wood to restore and protect 3 miles of clean cold water fish habitat in the Molalla River.

More Wild Steelhead in the Klamath

In 2020, Native Fish Society joined Tribal Nations and NGOs supporting the removal of four dams on the Klamath. The first dam is out, the final three will be gone in 2024. Wild fish, particularly wild steelhead, will benefit from 400 miles of additional habitat!

'24 GOALS

Remove Umpqua River Dams and Barriers
Bring accountability and critical cold water habitat connectivity to this iconic native fish river.

Support Steelhead Safe Commercial Fishing
In partnership with the Lax Kw'alaams Band, a fish trap will be used to collect steelhead data and create a selective gear fishing solution for the First Nation food fishery.

Protect Oregon Coastal Chinook Salmon
End the harm by a thousand cuts to these keystone native fish, through Endangered Species Act protections.

VISION FOR THE FUTURE

Recovering native fish
Pacific Northwest wild, native fish trend towards recovery, with specific salmon populations no longer needing federal protection.

More community action
500,000 people are part of the groundswell of public support taking action for abundant wild fish and healthy, free-flowing rivers.

Transition to wild abundance
An increasing number of Pacific Northwest rivers provide sustainable fishing opportunities for abundant wild fish without the use of hatchery programs.

HOME WATERS: WILD IS THE FUTURE

MESSAGE FROM EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR MARK SHERWOOD

FROM THE HOME POOL

Greetings friends of wild fish,

The Native Fish Society is proud to be the place where you take action and support the revival of abundant wild fish, free-flowing rivers, and sustainable fisheries.

The best part of our work is seeing a community come together, each giving what they can, and developing a collective power that sets the bar for conservation at a new level. Some years we see this happen once. This year we're celebrating two significant victories! Each victory represents the tireless efforts of our passionate volunteers, skillful staff members, invaluable partners, and YOU – our committed supporters.

This year, there's been a tremendous and growing excitement to see the Klamath dams finally coming down. At Native Fish Society, we're channeling some of that enthusiasm towards removing the Winchester Dam on the North Umpqua River, enabling spring Chinook and summer steelhead unfettered access to prime habitat high in the watershed.

Earlier this year, the 500,000-acre footprint of the Tillamook and Clatsop state forests received the biggest bump in public habitat protection in a generation thanks to a settlement we helped deliver that will provide 120 feet of forest along all fish-bearing streams. These improvements will stabilize banks, filter water, and restore habitat for threatened native fish like coho salmon while delivering cleaner drinking water to half a million Oregonians.

This summer, a community-wide coalition led by River Steward Tom Derry and Northern Oregon Coordinator Dr. Liz Perkin restored 3 miles of cold-water habitats in the free-flowing Molalla River – the most significant habitat restoration project in the river's history!

Your sustaining support continues this wild momentum. Momentum to restore and protect more habitat on the Deschutes, Shasta, and Rogue rivers. And momentum to ensure that until all our Northwest communities enjoy healthy homewaters with abundant wild fish, we will continue to join together to take collective action and advance science-based solutions to the root challenges facing native fish.

We're deeply grateful for your sustaining support and commitment to the revival of abundant wild fish.

Wild is the Future,

Mark Sherwood
Executive Director

NATIVE FISH WINS

WILD COHO REVIVAL

Coho, also known as silver salmon, are native to a remarkable diversity of rivers and streams from the foggy coastal lowlands of Puget Sound to the arid spring-fed valleys like Scott River in California. In Oregon, the lower Columbia River and Coastal populations of these fish are showing tremendous growth and resilience thanks to science-based solutions, many of them brokered in part by Native Fish Society. For example, volitional fish passage for juvenile and adult coho salmon on the Clackamas River (which also protects them from hatchery coho) has resulted in record-setting returns - with the combined wild run in 2023-4 likely to break 20,000 fish! On the coast, through Endangered Species Act protections, a 99% reduction in hatchery releases, a carefully managed wild fish fishery, and extensive habitat restoration is resulting in resilient runs of wild coho salmon returning to most coastal rivers. To further this coho revival, we're collaborating with local advocates in the Umpqua basin to remove barriers, like Winchester Dam.

MENDING THE MOLALLA RIVER

The free-flowing Molalla River is home to native runs of winter steelhead, spring Chinook, and coastal cutthroat trout. All of these native fish require clean cold water, especially during the summer months, when recent air and water temperatures reached record highs. Ensuring clean water following catastrophic wildfires requires cooperation and a lot of partners! Thankfully, the volunteers and staff at Native Fish Society have been up for this challenge. Together with state and federal agencies, local timber companies, Tribal Nations, landowners, and volunteers, the largest habitat restoration project in the Molalla River's history started this year - protecting 3 miles of critical clean cold-water fish habitat! Next year, we will be working with these partners to create additional Chinook spawning habitat through large wood structures that capture gravel and create these important habitats.

SAFEGUARDING THE HEADWATERS OF SIX FREE-FLOWING RIVERS

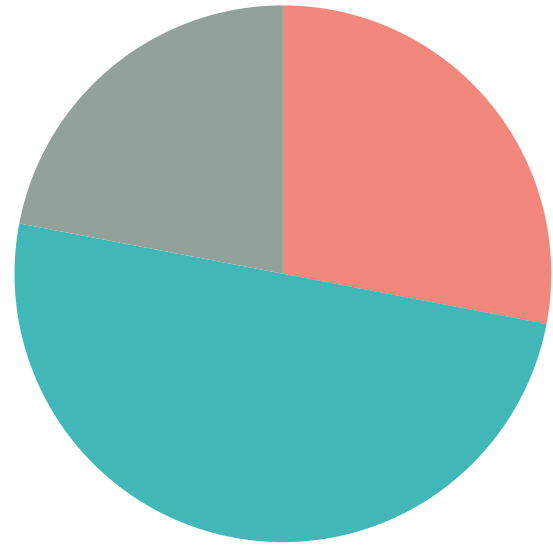

The rugged Tillamook rainforest is spread between 500,000 acres of public lands found in the Tillamook and Clatsop state forests on the Northern Oregon coast. This storied landscape gives birth to six remarkable free-flowing rivers: the Nehalem, Kilchis, Salmonberry, Wilson, Trask, and Miami. Each of these streams are homewaters for remarkable runs of wild winter steelhead and fall Chinook salmon, as well as spring Chinook, coho, chum, sea-run cutthroat trout, and Pacific Lamprey. To safeguard this bastion for wild fish, Native Fish Society and our partners brokered a landmark settlement with the state of Oregon to increase buffers along fish-bearing streams from 25ft to 120ft of forest - nearly a 5-fold increase. This landmark improvement, along with further protections from unsustainable roading and steep slope logging, promises to lock into place one more big piece of the puzzle towards restoring wild abundance.
